Making a Quilt

The Writing Process is like...

Time, patience, and effort go into both writing, and making a quilt. They both have similarities and common qualities. Starting patch by patch by patch, my process begins. My quilt is changing, forming and coming together. It starts with random colors and patterns. Ugly pieces thrown together, not looking too great and bright at first. When it first is done, it has frayed ends, uneven edges, and pieces that don't fit very well together, but when it finally finishes, it comes out as a beautiful, amazing item you would want to keep forever. It conforts and warms hearts. Some come together with ugly, weird, random pieces and patterns. Some come together with beautiful, pretty patches. Thus my writing process is done - until I discover a new pile of loose, random patches.

Time, patience, and effort go into both writing, and making a quilt. They both have similarities and common qualities. Starting patch by patch by patch, my process begins. My quilt is changing, forming, and coming together. It starts with random colors and patterns, torn, ugly pieces thrown together, not looking to great at first. When it is first done, it has frayed ends, uneven edges, and pieces that don't fit very well together. Then, it finally finishes and comes out as a beautiful, amazing item you would want to keep forever. It comforts and warms hearts. Some come together with ugly, weird, random pieces and patterns.
